

SAMPLE: GEO-OPTIMISED HIDEAWAY PAGE

A note on what this is

This is a sample hideaway page, written in the format I would set as the editorial standard for Perfect Hideaways.

The voice is unchanged from your existing standard. What has changed is the architecture underneath it: a fact layer at the top for AI systems, the story underneath for humans, and a structured FAQ at the end.

I have included design notes alongside the copy so you can see what was done and why. The property name is a placeholder. In practice this template would be applied to your existing listings, starting with the twenty highest-value hideaways.

The Page — As It Would Appear

The house sits on a low cliff above a stretch of coastline that most visitors to Plettenberg Bay never see. It is well off the main beach road. There is no sign at the turn-off. You leave the tar at the bend past the old whaling station, follow a dirt track through coastal thicket for about a kilometre, and then the trees open and the house appears, low and unassuming, its back turned to the road.

That is the first thing guests tend to notice. The house is quiet about itself.

Inside, the living space opens onto a covered terrace that runs the length of the front. On the far side of the terrace, a pool is set into the deck at the same height as the horizon, so that when you swim, the water and the ocean seem to meet at the same line. The view runs from the Robberg peninsula on the left to the far edge of the bay on the right. On a clear day the outline of the Tsitsikamma mountains is faint but visible on the horizon.

The house was built for slow days. There is a large kitchen with an island long enough to seat six, a dining table cut from a single piece of yellowwood, and a fireplace in the centre of the living room that gets used even in summer, when the sea mist comes in during the late afternoon. The four bedrooms are simple and quiet. Two have sea views; the other two open onto a courtyard that catches the morning sun.

The best room is not a room at all. It is the outdoor shower, tucked into a corner of the courtyard, walled with rough stone, with nothing above it but sky.

The area

Plettenberg Bay is one of the few places in South Africa where you can swim in the sea in the morning and walk in indigenous forest in the afternoon. Robberg Nature Reserve is a fifteen-minute drive, and the walk to the point takes about four hours if you stop along the way, which you will. The Tsitsikamma forest is an hour east. The wine farms of the Crag begin at the bottom of the valley.

The town has changed over the last decade — more restaurants, more traffic in December — but the coastline has not. Branders sits on one of the stretches that has stayed the same.

Who it suits

Families who want space. Couples who want quiet. Anyone who has been to Plettenberg Bay before and wants to stay somewhere they have not stayed yet.

Not for: anyone who needs to be in the middle of things. The house is ten minutes from the shops and twenty minutes from the main beach. That distance is deliberate.

Frequently asked

How many guests can Branders sleep?

Eight, across four bedrooms. Two bedrooms have sea views; two open onto an internal courtyard.

Does the property have a private pool?

Yes. It is heated and positioned on the ocean-facing deck. The pool is not fenced, so children should be supervised.

Is there direct beach access?

The house sits above a rocky tidal shelf rather than a sandy beach. The nearest swimming beach is Lookout Beach, a six-minute drive. Robberg Beach, one of the best in the country, is fifteen minutes.

What is the minimum stay?

Three nights outside of December and January. Five nights during the December–January peak.

Is the house suitable for young children?

Yes, with supervision. The pool is unfenced and the cliff edge is unguarded. A travel cot and high chair can be arranged on request.

Is there Wi-Fi?

Yes, fibre. It is reliable enough for streaming and video calls. Signal is patchy on the terrace.

Do you allow pets?

No. Branders is a pet-free property.

Is the house staffed?

A housekeeper comes three mornings a week. Additional service can be arranged at extra cost.

What time is check-in and check-out?

Check-in from 15:00. Check-out by 10:00.

The GEO Layer — What Changed and Why

The fact layer at the top is the single most important change.

AI systems cannot parse a story. They parse entities and attributes. Before any copy, the page now declares exactly what the property is, where it is, how many people it holds, what it costs, and what it contains. This block is what AI engines will lift, in whole or in part, when a traveller asks a question like “Where can I stay in Plettenberg Bay for eight people with a private pool?” Without it, the AI has to infer everything from prose, which it will do badly or not at all.

The story comes second, and stays intact.

Nothing about the voice has changed. The house is still “quiet about itself.” The shower is still “the best room.” The line about swimming and the ocean meeting at the same point is still there. That is the reason a guest books. The fact layer is the reason an AI recommends.

The “Who it suits / Not for” section is deliberate.

AI engines cite pages that answer comparison questions directly. “Is Branders suitable for young children?” is a question a real traveller will ask an AI. The page now answers it honestly, including the caveat about the unfenced pool. This is not a marketing decision. It is a trust decision. AI systems weight candid, specific content higher than marketing copy. It is also the right thing to do.

The FAQ answers real questions, in natural language.

Each question is phrased the way a traveller would ask it, not the way a brand would write it. “Is there Wi-Fi?” not “Connectivity.” “Do you allow pets?” not “Pet policy.” This matters because AI engines match the traveller’s phrasing, not the brand’s. Every question is also short and factual. The AI can lift a whole answer without needing to summarise.

The Structured Data

Closing note

What this page demonstrates is that the two things Perfect Hideaways currently does well, the voice, and the curation, can be preserved in full while the structure underneath them is rebuilt for the way people now search.

The story is still the story. The house is still quiet about itself. The shower is still the best room.

But if a traveller asks an AI agent where to stay in Plettenberg Bay with a private pool and space for eight people, this page now has everything the AI needs to say the word Branders.

That is the work. It is not a change of brand. It is a change of architecture.
